

Bank manager stole to gamble

A BANK manager who stole $131,240 and fed it all to poker machines was in a dream-like state while playing them, a court heard yesterday.

But a harsh reality of jail looms for father of three Andrew Burton McNeil.

The County Court yesterday heard family pressures led the business banking manager at the National Australia Bank's Glen Waverley branch into poker machines.

At first it was minor, but in 11 months McNeil, 38, lost almost an average $400 a day, which he was stealing from the bank.

By JEREMY KELLY

Prosecutor Jamie Catlin told the court McNeil played musical chairs with funds in legitimate customer's accounts and bogus ones he created.

Yesterday, McNeil pleaded guilty to one count of theft from the NAB between February 1998 and January 1999.

His counsel, David McKenzie, said McNeil had initially sought escape from family pressures with poker machines.

McNeil, of Maple St, Blackburn, will be sentenced today.

Bank manager stole to gamble

A BANK manager who stole $131,240 and fed it all to poker machines was in a dream-like state while playing them, a court heard yesterday.

But a harsh reality of jail looms for father of three Andrew Burton McNeil.

The County Court yesterday heard family pressures led the business banking manager at the National Australia Bank's Glen Waverley branch into poker machines.

At first it was minor, but in 11 months McNeil, 38, lost almost an average $400 a day, which he was stealing from the bank.

By JEREMY KELLY

Prosecutor Jamie Catlin told the court McNeil played musical chairs with funds in legitimate customer's accounts and bogus ones he created.

Yesterday, McNeil pleaded guilty to one count of theft from the NAB between February 1998 and January 1999.

His counsel, David McKenzie, said McNeil had initially sought escape from family pressures with poker machines.

McNeil, of Maple St, Blackburn, will be sentenced today.